

Signs And Symptoms Of UTIs In Older Adults

A urinary tract infection (UTI) is a bacterial or fungal infection of the urinary system, which includes the kidneys, uterus, bladder and urethra. Though uncomfortable, the first symptoms of a UTI signify that the immune system is working to fight off the infection.

Common symptoms of a UTI can include:

- Frequent, urgent need to urinate
- Painful or burning urination
- A constant feeling of a full bladder
- Pressure or pain in abdomen or lower back
- Dark, cloudy or thick urine
- Low-grade fever

These symptoms may create a greater risk for issues seemingly unrelated to a UTI, including:

- More frequent falls
- Confusion
- Agitation or aggression
- Fatigue and lethargy
- Decreased appetite

Symptoms Of UTIs For Seniors

Because seniors' immune systems aren't working like they used to, they may experience only a few or none of the common symptoms of a UTI.

Instead, UTIs can cause sudden changes in cognitive function for seniors known as UTI delirium. Symptoms can include:

Did you know?

UTIs in seniors are often missed because caretakers incorrectly assume their symptoms are just a sign of aging. That's why it's so important to note any sudden change in abilities, personality or behavior and seek medical attention immediately.
